“ TJ was my best friend. I hope that he is at peace now. If I could say one last thing to him, I would tell him how sorry I was. I knew he was depressed and hurt by everyone that he thought meant something to him. I told him that he was about to be a daddy in two days and to hold on to that. When I saw him he was so happy and couldn't have been more excited. He brought over a huge bag of baby clothes he had bought. He was looking forward to meeting his daughter and how he had all of these plans about being a father. I wish he had more time with her. I know everyone close to him wishes we had more time with him too. All I can say now is I feel so lucky to have had him in my life. He pushed me to be a better person and made me really think about my life and what kind of person I wanted to be. He came into my life at a time when I had given up. I remember we would stay up all night talking about everything. He shared his beliefs and things that excited him and pushed me to figure out my beliefs. I know everyone who cared about him as much as I did, feels the loss and are as heart broken as I am.
